

A WORLD SAFE FOR CAPITALISM

DOLLAR DIPLOMACY AND
AMERICA'S RISE TO GLOBAL POWER

CYRUS VEESER

A World Safe for Capitalism

This page intentionally left blank

A World Safe for Capitalism

Dollar Diplomacy and America's Rise to Global Power

Cyrus Veese

Columbia University Press

Publishers Since 1893

New York, Chichester, West Sussex

Copyright © 2002 Columbia University Press

All rights Reserved

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Veese, Cyrus.

A world safe for capitalism: Dollar diplomacy and

America's rise to global power / Cyrus Veese.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-231-12586-0 (cl) — ISBN 0-231-12587-9 (pa)

1. United States — Foreign economic relations — Dominican Republic. 2. Dominican Republic — Foreign economic relations — United States. 3. San Domingo Improvement Company (New York, N.Y.) 4. Debts, Public — Dominican Republic — History. 5. Loans, American — Dominican Republic — History. 6. United States — Foreign relations — Dominican Republic. 7. Dominican Republic — Foreign relations — United States. I. Title.

HF1502.Z4 U57 2002

337.7307292'09'034 — dc21

2002019283

Columbia University Press books are printed on permanent and durable acid-free paper

Printed in the United States of America

c 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

p 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Dedicated to the memory of my parents, Harry Veese and Elise Karagozian Veese and to my favorite Dominicanists, Lilian, Gaby and Minerva.

This page intentionally left blank

Contents

List of Illustrations ix
Acknowledgments xi
List of Abbreviations xiii

Introduction: Economic Interests and U.S. Expansion, 1892 — 1907 1

1. The Gilded Age Goes Abroad
The San Domingo Improvement Company and the Political Economy of the 1890s 10

2. Remapping the Caribbean
U.S. Caribbean Interests and the Mission of the SDIC 30

3. Peasants in the World Economy
The Dominican Republic in the Late 1800s 43

4. Dictating Development
Ulises Heureaux and the SDIC Remake the Dominican Republic 58

5. The Cash Nexus
Economic Crisis and the Collapse of the Heureaux-SDIC Regime 76

6. Old Wine in New Skins
The U.S. Government Champions the SDIC, 1899 – 1904	98
7. A Reign of Law Among Nations
John Bassett Moore and the Vindication of the SDIC, 1904	110
8. A World Safe for Capitalism
Stabilizing the Dominican Republic, 1901 – 1905	126
9. From The Gilded Age to Dollar Diplomacy
The SDIC and the Roosevelt Corollary, 1904 – 1907	143
Conclusion	155
Notes	163
Bibliography	227
Index	239

List of Illustrations

Map: The Dominican Republic, 1900 xv

Following page 78

- [1] Santo Domingo harbor in 1901, with colonial-era buildings used as residences in foreground. (Library of Congress, Prints & Photographs Division, Detroit Publishing Company Collection, reproduction no. LC-D4-10540R).
- [2] Smith M. Weed, president of the San Domingo Improvement Company (Courtesy Special Collections, Feinberg Library, Plattsburgh State University)
- [3] Dominican President Ulises Heureaux (Colección García, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo)
- [4] Commercial street of a provincial Dominican city in the early 1900s. (Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo)
- [5] A Dominican peasant and his daughter, early 1900s. (American Museum of Natural History Library, image no. 247947)
- [6] Rural home or bohío near Puerto Plata, early 1900s. (American Museum of Natural History Library, image no. 229075, photo by C.R. Halter)
- [7.1 & 7.2] A two-peso note and a one-peso “silver” coin, both issued

- by the SDIC-owned Banco Nacional de Santo Domingo in the last years of the Heureaux regime. (author's collection)
- [8] John Bassett Moore, advisor to the State Department and attorney to the SDIC, in a portrait by Edwin Burrage Child. (Permanent Collection of the university of Delaware.)
- [9] The U.S.S. Bancroft, a small, steel-hulled gunboat, often patrolled Dominican waters while assigned to the Caribbean squadron from 1902 to 1906. (Library of Congress, Prints & Photographs Division, Detroit Publishing Company Collection, reproduction no. LC-D4-20141)
- [10] From left, U.S. Minister Thomas C. Dawson, Dominican President Carlos Morales Languasco, and Dominican Minister of Foreign Affairs Juan P. Sánchez, in Santo Domingo, 1904 (Library of Congress, Prints & Photographs Division, Hanna-McCormick Collection, reproduction no. LC-USZ62-107890)
- [11] Soldiers marching in Santo Domingo in 1904 or 1905. (Library of Congress, Prints & Photographs Division, Hanna-McCormick Collection, reproduction no. LC-USZ62-107892)
- [12] Jacob Hollander, architect of the refunding of the Dominican debt after 1905. (The Ferdinand Hamburger, Jr., Archives of The Johns Hopkins University)
- [13] President Theodore Roosevelt with U.S. naval officers and other officials during a naval review, 1906 (Theodore Roosevelt Collection, Harvard College Library)

Acknowledgments

The personal debts I incurred in researching and writing this book spread across several continents, recapitulating the credit network that linked the United States, the Dominican Republic, and Europe at the end of the nineteenth century.

The idea for this study came to me fully formed in an Irish bar on Eighth Avenue near 46th Street, where Emelio Betances and I had stopped to discuss his dissertation on the formation of the Dominican state, since published as State and Society in the Dominican Republic. My adviser, Eric Foner, later looked over a list of possible dissertation topics and counseled, “Do the Dominican Republic.” In the early stages of the project, Emelio Betances, Herbert Klein, Frank Moya Pons, Lisa McGirr, Ariel Salzmann, Gerald Sider, and David Nasaw offered advice that guided my research. I also owe thanks to Elizabeth Blackmar, Robert McCaughey, Eric McKittrick and James Shenton of the Columbia history department for their support and intellectual guidance. In the Dominican Republic, three accomplished historians generously shared their knowledge, contacts, and resources—Roberto Cassá, Jaime Domínguez, and Raymundo González. Jaime arranged for me to read microfilm of French foreign ministry records at the Maison Francaise in Santo Domingo, going so far as to lend me his microfilm viewer. The staff at the Archivo General de la Nación extended themselves far beyond their official duty, often spending hours helping me decipher the cryptic longhand of Ulises Heureaux. I thank Eddy Jaquez, Rosmery Fanfán, and Adalgiza Cabrera especially. All three shifts of waiters at El Dumbo adjusted to my puzzling presence in what for me was an air-conditioned, 24-hour research facility.

In New York, participants in the Mellon working seminar at Columbia University read and commented on several chapters of this work. Sven Beckert, Emelio Betances, Alan Brinkley, Roberto Cassá, Jaime Domínguez, Norman Finkelstein, Charles Tilly, Richard Turitz, and Hobart Spalding also commented on portions of the manuscript. Martha Biondi and Adele Oltman, in particular, took pains to work through early versions of several chapters. Betsy Blackmar found the time to both read and encourage. Anders Stephanson provided a regular antidote to my empirical tendencies, while Eric Foner made astute editorial suggestions about material far removed from his own areas of interest. Martin Sklar offered incisive objections to the representation of Gilded Age capitalism and corruption in chapter 1. Anonymous reviewers for Diplomatic History offered useful comments on an article version of chapter nine. Gaynor Ellis brought a merciless but salutary intolerance for academic jargon to her reading of these chapters.

In England, Andrew and Ruth Seager made possible a stint of compressed research at the Public Record Office and the Guildhall Library. I benefited from the advice of librarians at those institutions as well as the U.S. National Archives, Library of Congress Manuscript Division, Columbia University Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Columbia University School of Law Special Collections, Moorland-Springarn Collection at Howard University, and Benjamin J. Feinberg Library at SUNY/Plattsburgh. A grant from Fulbright/I.I.E. allowed me to spend over a year doing research in Santo Domingo, and I owe a special thanks to Mary Fedorko for her interest in this project. Barbara Burke provided food, lodging, and critical readings on my many trips to Washington, D.C.

A summer research grant from Bentley College allowed me to revise the manuscript for publication. At Columbia University Press, Peter Dimock, Anne Routon, and Leslie Bialler provided level-headed encouragement and hard-nosed editorial advice.

Harold Veaser managed to read the entire manuscript critically even as he urged me to carry the project to its always provisional conclusion. Elise Veaser provided material and emotional support all along the way, but sadly is not here to see the final product. Lilian Bobea offered her own vision of Dominican history and also proved that Dominican-American relations, if founded on equality and mutual respect, can be wonderful indeed.

Abbreviations

AF	Area File of the Naval Records Collection, Area 8, United States National Archives
AGN	Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
CE	Correspondencia Epistolar de Ulises Heureaux, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
CFB	Council of the Corporation of Foreign Bondholders, Guildhall Library, London
CM	Presidencia de la República, Copiadores de Carlos Morales Languasco, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
DI	Diplomatic Instructions of the Department of State, Haiti and Santo Domingo, United States National Archives
DL	Notes from the Dominican Legation to the State Department, United States National Archives
FO 23	General Correspondence before 1906, Dominican Republic, Foreign Office, Public Record Office, Kew, England
FO 140	Embassy and Consular Archives, Dominican Republic, Foreign Office, Public Record Office, Kew, England
FRUS	Foreign Relations of the United States
FWH	Frederick William Holls papers, Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Columbia University
GO	Gaceta Oficial, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
JBM	John Bassett Moore papers, Columbia University School of Law Special Collections

JHH	Jacob Hollander papers, United States National Archives
MHC	Ministerio de Hacienda y Comercio, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
MIP	Ministerio de lo Interior y Policía, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
MRE	Ministerio de Relaciones Exteriores, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
NYT	New York Times
NYTr	New York Tribune
UH	Presidencia de la República, Copiadores de Ulises Heureaux, Archivo General de la Nación, Santo Domingo
USM	Despatches from United States Ministers to the Dominican Republic, United States National Archives

This page intentionally left blank

A World Safe for Capitalism

This page intentionally left blank

A World Safe for Capitalism

Columbia Studies in Contemporary American History
Alan Brinkley, General Editor